SYRACUSE, Wednesday, July 30.

The Democratic portion of the Democracy met in Market Hall at noon to-day.

There was a full attendance of delegates and a large number of spectators, the Hall being well filled. The Hards called the Convention to order, and appointed Governor SEYMOUR, of Tioga, temporary Chairman.

Mr. Hanks took his seat amid applause, and said:

Gentlemen of the Convention: I cannot but be sensible of the honor you have conferred upon me by thus unanimously in outside over the most important Convention the State has ever known. I cannot but hope, by promoting the union of the Democracy, and by urging the claims of any particular man to unite the party, by wise counsels, to secure victory in the State. (Cheers.)

Mr. W. W. Cooper, of New-York, and Peter Cagger, of Albany, were appointed temporary Secretaries.

Mr. Bowen, of New-York, moved that a roll of the delegates be called.

The Honduras Memorandum.

A memorandum, drawn up by the representatives of Honduras, is about to be submitted to the representatives of the different European powers accredited to Her Majesty. It states that, although several lines of interoceanic communication have been designated, each having its earnest supporters, yet it is the opinion of competent judges that the line recently projected through the State of Honduras, from Puerto Caballos to the Bay of Fonseca, possesses signal advantages over any other that has yet been suggested for a railway. The memorandum contains an article (drawn up by the representatives of Honduras accredited to Great Britain, France and the United States) which is to be proposed to extend to all treaties of amity and commerce which Honduras may make with the great maritime powers of Europe and America. The proposed article concedes "all and first privileges conferred with the most favored nation" to all nations on equal terms, throughout the undisputed sovereignty of Honduras over the line of the road, and guarantees its neutrality and its protection against violence and interruption.

The Recruit Question.

The Paris correspondent of the London Daily News, referring to the Regency question, says:

"Although it appeared in the journals of Europe that the Regency Bill, Senatus Consultum, was passed without modification, it is not known that some amendments were made. They, however, merely related to the Council of Regency, and certainly did not, in any way, diminish the large powers with which it is the Emperor's desire to invest the Empress. A not unnatural apprehension of priestly influence over a woman's mind gave rise to a proposition that the oath to be taken by the Empress Regent should comprise an assurance to maintain the concordat in all its integrity. It is said that a warm debate took place on the subject, which she ultimately withdrawn, as 'unnecessary.' The purist party struggled violently against the clause, and an archbishop declared that he would vote against the bill altogether if it were adopted."

American Runaway Seamen—Letter from Sir Bulwer.

Mr. CLAYTON, the Clerk to the Tyne Improvement Commissioners, having written to the United States Ambassador, with a view to procure a treaty with England for the extradition of runaway seamen, has received the following reply:

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
LONDON, 24th July.

SIR,—I have to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 8th instant, written on the part of the Tyne Improvement Commissioners, on the subject of an arrangement between the Government of this country and the Government of the United States on the subject of seamen deserting from merchant vessels to necessarily followed by great inconvenience. It has already engaged the attention of this legation, more particularly during the last year, and will only be lost sight of when believed to be without remedy.

With respect, yours,
G. M. DALLAS.

Evacuation of the Crimea.

Special Correspondence of the London Times.

BALAKLAVA, July 1.—The evacuation of the Crimea is all but accomplished. In last night's orders are the arrangements for breaking up the camp. There remain now the 90th, 68th, 72d and 42nd Regiments, a portion of the 11th Hussars, some Land Transport battalions, and a few Sappers and Miners. The plateau is deserted. On the 17th June the last of the Turkish Contingent took their departure from Kertch, and the place was handed over to the Russians. Notwithstanding much difficulty and opposition of a negative and underhand character, the Contingent has succeeded in obtaining a military position which every body connected with it believed it would not only have established but have augmented in any encounter with the enemy. The influence acquired by the officers over the men, the most unbounded and obedience on the part of the latter was quickened by respect and affection. The 21st have left by this time, and Kertch is once more a Russian town. On the breaking up of the Contingent the general commanding issued an order which gave great satisfaction to the Contingent.

The following telegraphic message has been received at the Admiralty from Admiral Guey, at Constantinople, dated July 14:—"The Bosphorus has arrived with Admiral Freemantle. Every person belonging to the army had embarked, and all the ships had sailed from the Crimea on Saturday evening, except the Leander and Gladiator. Blowing a strong gale from the southward for the last three days."

Rumor of an Insurrection at the Cape of Good Hope.

Advices to the 7th of May had been received in England from the Cape.

Up to that date the state of affairs on the frontier in the free State (late Sovereignty) side stood thus: A letter had been received by the Governor, Sir GERVASE GREY, from the President of the free State, stating that it was his intention to move out in a few days for the purpose of chastising a predatory chief, ally to the Basutah nation, who had committed or connived at robbing and cattle stealing, and who refused restitution or satisfaction; that the said chief was preparing to defend himself, and had been promised assistance by one of the relations of MOSHESH, the chief of the Basutahs, who, at the request of the President, had remonstrated with his kinsman without effect; that it was apprehended that other tribes would join the refractory chief, and fears of a widespread rising were generally entertained.

The President also desired aid from Governor GREY, and the Governor had made a communication to the Cape Parliament on this matter, tending much to allay the excitement caused by a knowledge of the receipt of the above letter to him, but a very uneasy feeling prevailed, and only one sentiment was uppermost throughout the community. As a precautionary measure all the available troops—about 600 only—had left for the Outer frigate for East London, and her Majesty's steam frigate Pandora had been dispatched to the Mauritius with an urgent request from Governor GREY for the loan of a regiment of Infantry, which was to be conveyed direct to East London in that vessel.

The "commando" of the free State was to have commenced its march in three columns by an many different routes, converging on the chief's place of residence some days before the 7th of May.

Much anxiety prevails as to the result. The Basutah's, as is well known, can bring from 10,000 to 12,000 well-trained and well-armed fighting men in the field.

[illegible] Emigration of Irishmen to America, there are indications, and there are discussions—the former, as I think, by far the stronger. But [illegible] of striking here. I must try to give you a picture of the political parties now extant, and arraying themselves against one another at this moment, to measure their strength for the impending Presidential election.

Understand, first, that the material and physical advantages which this side of the Atlantic offers over that side, to industrious and well-instructed peasantry, are so great even [illegible] Hitherto, no drunken vagabond came,—no idle squireen, cousin-German to Lord Donoughmore, no naked cassiokeen. But still as ever, boundless prairies invite the plow. Even in States already well settled, one million of additional [illegible] labor, [illegible] industrious, with no outfit but two strong and willing hands, could earn such wages, wear such clothes and eat such viands, as the same class will never see in Ireland until after the destruction of the British Empire. In every district of every State, thriving cities, towns and villages, cry aloud piteously for more artisans, for new bricklayers, blacksmiths, quarrymen, wagoners; who may reduce the monstrous wages, and make supply adequate to demand. All these material inducements remain as they were: no better, and no worse.

On the other side is to be set the new political bugbear of "Sewiguers" and "Catholics,"—threatening to take the shape of civil disabilities, religious penal laws, restriction or restriction of the laws of naturalization;—but which appears, as yet, in the form only of occasional revolvers; pills guarded against the foreign vote by too-patriotic bullies; a church here and there attacked and shorn of its Cross, savoring of superstition, vexing the soul of enlightened Calvinistic rowdy or Lutheran short-boy. To all this movement, (if that be movement, which is "all action and no go,") you must beware of attaching too much importance. Our newspapers are so hysterical, their language so eloquent, their leading columns so tall, and of architectural orders so florid—many of them, too, rivaling "London's tall column, pointing to the skies," in its character for veracity.

But let me try to give you some approximate notion of the forces now organizing themselves for the Presidential election;—and map out before you the field which is fairly pitched for this great contest. The towers are now joined—the candidates standing forth before the people, each on his platform and under his own banner. And although I am no citizen—no editor now—have neither vote nor influence; yet from my speculative or watch-tower, high among these cloudy and thunderous Alleghanies, I look on earnestly, these lazy days—a calm but not an uninterested spectator. A spectator, indeed, very deeply interested, though there were nothing else to look at than the powerful vital action that is this moment sending the blood of the Republic, with quickened pulse, coursing through its veins to the utmost capillaries, swelling every muscle, stretching every fibre, sharpening every faculty. Each little town, each village, has its animated discussions, its clubs, its ratification meetings, and will make itself felt on the result through the regular harmonious action of most complicated, but well-oiled and polished electoral machinery. The vast segment of the globe over which this work is going on—the intensity of the passion—the regularity of the action—the multitude of centres of action, in each of which centres fiery men with fuming lips are vehemently "saving the country;" and in each of these foamy centers, some one man of them—he alone seems able to save it; yet, that madness, and almost chaos come again (as to a stranger it might seem) being nothing but the regular circulation of the blood, a little quickened or so; nothing but the wholesome vital action, I tell you, of this powerful frame; betokening not health only, but longevity—makes a fair and imposing show, grand in its moral might and its immortal ditto—to me a most impressive scene of tense and terrible intellectual excitement, compared with which Athenian Agora or Roman Forum was but a cabinet picture compared with which Poland's two hundred thousand nobles tramping together on the plain hard by the Vistula, with crest and scutcheon, and plume, to elect a sovereign Jagellon, was but a baby-show.

Possibly, indeed, the fate of one hemisphere does hang upon this election; possibly the fate of two; and two hemispheres make a globe. Healthy and full of life and blood as this young Republic is, it can doubtless commit suicide in the very wantonness of its too-plethoric life—or may drink poison administered by a treacherous Anglo-Saxon cousin, and so perversely die. Which may the Heavens avert!

For your behoof then, I shall now, so far as a not uninteresting inspection and survey may enable me, make a general review of the vast pitched field, the chieftains, the banners, and the hosts that range themselves thereunder.

First: there rides FREMONT! He of the Rocky Mountains. His legions array themselves as did of yore the legions of Satan, in the quarter of the North. And let us see what legend is on his shield. But to quit this knightly rigmarole, and come down to plain speech: Mr. FREMONT comes forward as the leader of a party which proclaims that the Northern States, having now at last the power, shall give law to the Southern States as to the terms and conditions on which the "Territories" belonging to the whole Confederation shall be settled and peopled. The Constitution decrees the coordinate equality of the several States: this party proclaims their inequality. It asserts the right to brand these Southern people with a moral stigma before the civilized world—to treat them as communities affected with a loathsome leprosy—to set a plague-mark upon their door-posts, and to say to them, "Stay where you are; stir not one step abroad, lest you infect us, sound and wholesome citizens; these Territories, won by our common blood and treasure, are for us to expand and revel in; for behold, we are clean! Our dear sick brethren, we are compelled, though it pains our heart, to hem you in and inclose you with a ring-fence, so offensive are you become to the general nostril. We shall also furnish you with physicians, Doctor BUCHANAN, Doctor PARKER—most eminent practitioners. Purge you, make you clean; and when you have no taint or odor of the evil thing upon you, we shall admit you to a joint enjoyment of our common estate, perhaps."

Literally so. British cant and Yankee flunkeyism have carried it so far. For you must know that the school of "literary" people in the North-eastern States is altogether British; and their leading politicians are also literati, or even philosophers, at your service; and they speak and write for English fame, rather than American; and even in the halls of Congress, their orations are addressed not to their auditory, not to the people outside, but to Printing-house-square, Exeter Hall and Hanover-square rooms. To speak to Buncombe has been accounted bad enough—yet Buncombe is at least a county in America, a rough and rocky county, too, away behind the mountains in North Carolina. Better, I should deem it, for an American Senator to speak to Buncombe, than to speak to Cockaigne, to Houndsditch and the Isle of Dogs!

Exeter Hall hath conceived and brought forth such a foaming, such a raving Tabernacle! There has been revealed to it, lately that in the framing of the Constitution and Union of this Republic, a monstrous crime was committed—what, is this we have done? they say—sold ourselves to a devil, struck an "abominable bargain," made a league with Death, and a covenant with Hell!—Yet you are not to suppose that the party which now supports Fremont contains entirely of stark and raving madmen and traitors. By no means; many moderate and conservative men are among their ranks (without such there can be no party) who have got a general notion that the institution of Slavery, even, if it be not immoral and a sin, yet cramps the energy of a community, and impedes what they call its "progress." Crowds also, of mere partizans are there, who care nothing about sin, nothing about British slang, nothing about "progress," but have just got a "Northern principle," and who naturally feel that the North (that is, they and their neighbors) ought to have all the advantages it can clutch. Above all, there are present "politicians" (or place-hunters, we term them here) who, desiring to live at the people's expense, feel that if they can carry their party into power, they have a chance of office and dollars per annum. The last class make a large proportion of all the parties and the same may be said of the other parties.

The old parties of Whigs and Democrats, too, are there, (though all the States of the Union are represented in this convention, yet, in point of numbers, the North outnumbers the Confederate States ten to one,) and they are the Fremont party, and will not fight against the Constitution. The party of Fremont have the Freedom Party, and Liberty, and by another which I will tell you about by and by, and which you will find in CALHOUN'S Discourse on the Constitution, the Abolition party, and the Northern party, and the Sewiguer party, and the Catholic party, and the Anti-Nebraska party, and the Anti-Slavery party, and the Anti-Everything-else-but-Fremont party, and the Anti-Fremont party, and the Fremont party, and the Anti-Buchanan party, and the Anti-Buchanan-and-Fremont party, and the Anti-Buchanan-and-Anti-Fremont party, and the Fremont-and-Anti-Buchanan party, and the Anti-Fillmore party, and the Anti-Fillmore-and-Anti-Buchanan party, and the Anti-Fillmore-and-Anti-Fremont party, and the Anti-Fillmore-and-Anti-Buchanan-and-Anti-Fremont party, and the Fillmore-and-Anti-Buchanan-and-Anti-Fremont party, and the Fillmore-and-Anti-Fremont party, and the Fillmore-and-Anti-Buchanan party, and the Fillmore party, and the Buchanan-and-Fillmore party, and the Buchanan party, and the Anti-Fillmore-and-Buchanan-and-Anti-Fremont party, and the Anti-Fillmore-and-Anti-Fremont party, and the Anti-Fillmore-and-Anti-Buchanan party, and the Anti-Fillmore party, and the Anti-Everything-else-but-Fillmore party, and the Anti-Everything-else-but-Anti-Fillmore party, and the Anti-Everything-else-but-Anti-Fillmore-and-Anti-Buchanan party, and the Anti-Everything-else-but-Anti-Fillmore-and-Anti-Fremont party, and the Anti-Everything-else-but-Anti-Fillmore-and-Anti-Buchanan-and-Anti-Fremont party, and the Anti-Everything-else-but-Anti-Fillmore-and-Anti-Buchanan-and-Fremont party, and the Anti-Everything-else-but-Anti-Fillmore-and-Fremont party, and the Anti-Everything-else-but-Anti-Fillmore-and-Anti-Buchanan-and-Anti-Fremont-and-Fillmore party, and the Anti-Everything-else-but-Anti-Fillmore-and-Anti-Buchanan-and-Anti-Fremont-and-Fillmore-and-Buchanan party, and the Anti-Everything-else-but-Anti-Fillmore-and-Anti-Buchanan-and-Anti-Fremont-and-Fillmore-and-Buchanan-and-Fremont party, and the Anti-Everything-else-but-Anti-Fillmore-and-Anti-Buchanan-and-Anti-Fremont-and-Fillmore-and-Buchanan-and-Fremont-and-

Career and Close of Doughfaceery.

On the 13th of May last, Gen. Cass concluded the delivery in the United States Senate of a well-conned essay on his favorite absurdity of Squatter Sovereignty. The opportunity was favorable for apology and repentance. Many friends of the old politician hoped that he would make a clean breast of it, and confess that, having deceived and cajoled himself, he had sided in deceiving and cajoling others. Indeed, had he desired to make a decent and dignified exit, the occasion was most appropriate for a confession of guilt and a prayer for pardon; and what other finale could be more fitting to such a life? We find in the speech, however, nothing of this sort; indeed, we find nothing at all but words; not an idea; not a moral expression; not even a pledge against future explanations.

In the dreary waste of repetition transported by the speaker, we can discern that he professes to discover in the act repealing the Missouri Compromise a substantive assertion and confirmation of the principle of self-government by the people of the Territories. He believes that this principle has settled the question of Slavery, and he regards with quiet gratification the condition of affairs in Kansas. He censures the Emigrant Aid Societies of the North, omits to refer to those of the South, and gently expostulates with the Missourians against the renewal of their wild sports in the West—not forgetting, however, to inform them that the murders, robbery and outlawries which they have practiced on so grand a scale were excusable, because provoked by resistance to the Fugitive act, and by Sharpe-rifle sermons, at the North. It is not very material to observe that the orator was himself afraid or ashamed to vote for this same Fugitive law, that he deprecated the repeal of the Compromise when first proposed, and that it is an utterly unfounded pretence that any sort of Popular Sovereignty is conceded by the Kansas act, or that the question of Slavery is referred to the people of the Territories by it. All these things have been bla-zoned forth in the light of demonstration a thousand times, and are as well established in the mind and memory of Gen. Cass as in those of any man in the country. But, to vindicate the truth of history, it ought to be noticed that immediately after declaring his devotion to Popular Sovereignty, and his conviction that it was guaranteed and fully secured in the Kansas bill, and that the so-called Kansas Legislature was a valid and legal body, he stepped forward and affirmed that the laws it had passed on the subject of Slavery were a disgrace to Christianity and civilization, and a blot upon our republican name, and he voted to abolish such of those laws as could be repealed without defeating the object of them; thus showing his utter contempt for the two principles by which he professed to be guided, to wit: non-intervention by Congress, and leaving to the people the full power of legislation over their domestic concerns.

Gen. Cass is the best preserved specimen of a class of politicians which the South has supported at the North for its special purposes, and which is rapidly passing away. We do not like to use disrespectful terms, however expressive and therefore do not say that Gen. Cass is the most conspicuous of the Doughfaces. Roman armies of invasion were always accompanied by numerous bodies of auxiliaries called Mercenarii, (from Merx, defined as "any kind of merchandise," "a slave dearly bought,") composed of the natives of the country about to be conquered and annexed to the Empire. Gen. Cass will be described by impartial biographers as a chief of those auxiliaries which the South in the Nineteenth Century contrived by various means to maintain in the Free States, and whom she paid by contributions upon the people among whom they were stationed. His life has a beautiful consistency. From its early beginning to its venerable close he has known but one service, that of the South and of Slavery. Others who have distinguished themselves in the same career have not always worn the same livery. Mr. BUCHANAN was, up to thirty years of age, a Federalist, openly hostile to the encroachments of Slavery upon free territory. Mr. DOUGLAS, as late as 1848, was loud and decided in his protest against any removal of the metes and bounds by which its ambition was limited and its insolence curbed. Mr. WEBSTER acquiesced in their disturbance only at the end of a long life devoted mainly to Freedom, and died, broken-hearted, two years after his fall. Mr. FILLMORE was once an Erie County Abolitionist, and MARTIN VAN BUREN for a short time allowed personal malice to break the chain of his subserviency, and interject into his record a ray of light and manliness.

Entering upon the mission of his life more than half a century ago, Gen. Cass has risen by regular gradations from a schoolmaster in Delaware to the post of chief apologist and defender of Border Ruffianism in Kansas, and chief defamer of the Free States and their people. The South could reward his devotion, and did it at each stage of the service imposed upon him. For more than forty years he has been in public employment, and has grown rich upon salary and the opportunities of gain which his offices gave him. As Indian Agent, Governor, Militia Colonel, Secretary of War, Foreign Minister, Senator, and candidate for the Presidency, Gen. Cass has looked to the South for his instructions and his pay. His service has been marked with steady perseverance and ability; but it is to mention that, though the South will continue to reward such servants, the school in which they were trained has been broken up, and it is doubtful whether it will be worth its cost.

The Northwest has been heartsick in memory of Southern mercenaries. This was owing to the conduct of the territorial officers by the influence of 1787 came from Virginia and other slaveholding States, and carried with them the feelings and prejudices of their section. The French settlers in Indiana, Illinois, and Michigan, all held slaves under the colonial law of the mother country. The Federal Administration was, during the first half century of the existence of the Government, with the exception of eight years, under the absolute control of the slaveholding interest. Nearly all the Territorial officers held slaves, in spite of the Ordinance, and were incessant in their efforts to break down that prohibition, and very nearly succeeded. The power and the influence of Government were all on the side of Slavery, and nothing but the organic law of 1787 saved the States west of Ohio from the institution. But, about thirty-five years ago, a change took place. Freedom vindicated herself, and her final triumph in that region is about to produce the most important political results.

The generation of Pro-Slavery emigrants into the Northwest is passing away. Public sentiment against Slavery has been consolidated, and is already nearly unanimous. The Southern mercenary will be sustained by nothing but his official pay. When, therefore, Gen. Cass dies, there will be no more Casses. The mercenaries of a later generation, as DOUGLAS, BUCHANAN and AUGUSTUS CAESAR DODGE, will be first silenced, and then banished. The case of the rising demagogue, DOUGLAS, is exceptional; he may last a little longer, because his talents are far greater than any of his associated possess; but his fate is clear. He will be compelled to retire to North Carolina or Mississippi, where he has negroes and estates, and may represent one or both in the Senate; but his place is no longer in the Northwest. The tie of social sympathy being severed, what bond of union will remain between this isolated section and the South?

The Garden of America.

In the year 1796, a Scotch baronet, Sir JOHN SINCLAIR, the father of the well known authoress, Miss CATHARINE SINCLAIR, entertained a project of removing to the United States, and wrote to WASHINGTON asking information as to the general condition of the country and the best part of it for an emigrant to settle in. The answer of WASHINGTON contained a glance at all the States, and some extremely interesting particulars touching that district with which he was most familiar, and which he very naturally regarded as the most highly favored portion of the Union. Of "the seaboard of all the Southern States," he says, "I shall say but little—for as I should not choose to be an inhabitant of them myself, I ought not to say anything that would induce others so to be so." Happily there were no South Carolinas Brooksses in those days, or this unfavorable allusion to that part of the Union might have provoked a personal assault from some of the chivalry of the South.

But, partial as WASHINGTON was to his native soil, he could not shut his eyes to the fact that the farming lands of Pennsylvania, though less fertile and less favorably situated than those of Maryland and Virginia, brought better prices; and among the causes he assigns for this anomalous fact, he states that, in Pennsylvania:

"There are laws for the gradual abolition of Slavery, which neither of the two States above-mentioned (Maryland and Virginia) have at present, but which nothing is more certain than that they must have, and at a period not remote."

Those timid creatures, the Old-Line Whigs of the North, who are so terrified at the sectionalism of Republicanism at the present day, might take heart, if they had the heart, to think for themselves, in contemplating the kind of sectionalism which was sanctioned by WASHINGTON. All that the Republicans of the present day aim at is to prevent the extension of Slavery into territory from which it was excluded by the Missouri Compromise, but WASHINGTON was for excluding it from Virginia and Maryland, and had no doubt that it would be done, too, and so advised a foreigner who wished to emigrate to this country; he not only advised him not to go to the seaboard of a slaveholding State, for the reason that he would not go there himself; but, as an inducement to emigrants to settle in Virginia stated that nothing was more certain than that she would abolish Slavery. Is there a man of all the respectable gentlemen who permitted their names to be used in connection with the meeting at the Academy of Music last week, who would have the courage to vote for a candidate who avowed such Black Republican sectional sentiments?

Looking upon the abolition of Slavery in Virginia and Maryland as absolutely certain, WASHINGTON does "not hesitate to pronounce that the lands on the waters of Potomac will, in a few years, be in greater demand, and in higher estimation than in any other part of the United States."

How this prophecy has been fulfilled we need not point out. The lands on the Potomac have been blasted by the continuance of Slavery, and have been the lowest in value of any farming lands in the country; and they are even less valuable now than they were when this letter was written.

Though the partialities of WASHINGTON very naturally led him to regard the territory lying upon the Potomac as destined to be the future seat of art, commerce and science in the New World, yet he designated as the destined "garden of America" that portion of the Union formed by the western parts of Virginia, Maryland and North Carolina, "forasmuch as it lies between the two extremes of heat and cold, partaking in a degree of the advantages of both, without feeling much the inconveniences of either, and with truth it may be said, is among the most fertile lands in America, east of the Agalachian mountains."

Sixty years have passed away since this spot, so highly favored by nature, was pointed out by the wise and good WASHINGTON as that portion of the United States which was to be called the Garden of America, and it still possesses a comparative desert, its fertility rendered of little account, and its beautiful advantages of Robert Mitchell on the Presidential Contest.

JOHN MITCHEL, the Irish patriot, has written a letter to his countrymen on the general aspect of affairs in this country, but especially in respect to their duty in the present contest for the Presidency. JOHN's opportunities for obtaining correct information on the subject of American politics have not been particularly favorable, and it is not at all to be wondered at that his ideas are rather confused, or that he should go in for BUCHANAN with all his might and power of blackguardism. He is a master of that kind of rhetoric which the great O'CONNELL used to call blackwashing; and he uses it with great freedom in his letter, and with a characteristically free and easy disregard of facts. Having emigrated from Australia to San Francisco, from the latter place to New-York, and from New-York to Tennessee, which he makes his home, his opportunities for gaining a knowledge of American institutions and politics have been slender. It might have been supposed that, having been himself a victim of the oppression, he would have felt some sympathy for the oppressed of other nations; but such does not appear to be the case. He no sooner lands upon our soil than he ranges himself on the side of Slavery, and now gives his aid and his sympathies to the Kansas tyrants and Border Ruffians, and, with a genuine Donnybrook hullaballoo, shouts out down with FREMONT and Freedom.

Suggestions to Travelers.

Everybody in July and August spends some portion of his time, "be the same more or less," as the lawyers say, upon railroads, steamboats and stage coaches. Our remarks consequently are addressed to everybody.

When the spirit and the possession of the "Almighty Dollar" move you to set out on a tour of pleasure or sanitary recruitment, be sure in the first place, when you change your clothes and attire yourself in a traveling suit, that you leave your porte-monnaie, containing the means of defraying your expenses, in the pocket of the pantaloons which you have just taken off. The only result will be that when you reach the cars or boat, on stepping forward to purchase a ticket you will find it necessary to return home and await the departure of the next mode of conveyance that will carry you to your destination. The delay may provoke you a little, but the advantage of it is that you will thus have an opportunity of recollecting other things that may have been forgotten in the hurry of departure. Thus, as all readily is perceived, the gain is all in your side.

If you are going by railroad take great care on entering the cars to seat yourself on the sunny side, and in the immediate vicinity of a mother with several small children. Thus you will be insured in the first place to secure your mind by calculating the difference between the temperature of the seat which you occupy and that of your fellow-traveler on the shady side, and, in the second place, the musical sound of the children bawling over the rails, will be diversified by the music of infantile bawls and squalls. Thus the mind will find rational and mathematical employment, and the ear will be delighted with dulcet strains of melody. Nothing, to our ears, can equal in sweetness the voices of the young of the human species when their little hearts burst forth in grief at the refusal of "stern parients" to furnish them with a further supply of gingerbread; and, traveler, when the softened heart of the mother yields to their piteous wailings and she decides to procure the wished-for article at the next station, think of your happiness in being selected by the fond maternal as the humble instrument, in her hands, of supplying the mouths of your suffering, hungering brethren of tender years, with the indispensable luxury which they crave. Don't yield to the request of the mother with an ill-concealed chagrin and stamp and swear when you get outside of the car, and convey the whole family to the region of everlasting Summer over the T rail of an oath, but, with more than a Uriah Heep-ish humility, rise to obey her mandates. When you have made your purchase, start for the cars on hearing the whistle, oblivious of your further duty of paying for the article. Then when your creditor to the amount of three cents nabs you, hand him a dollar bill without having time to wait for the change, and swim after the train on a sea of your own perspiration, induced by over-exertion on a warm day. If you succeed in overtaking it, poke your elbows into the ribs of the switchman as you awkwardly jump aboard, drop your gingerbread on the other side as you lunge forward with the motion of the cars, somewhat aided by an answering salute from the switchman, and then go in and make your apologies to the lady with small children, and employ yourself in trying to console them for the rest of the journey. Thus happily employed, the time will slip by rapidly, and you will alight at the station to which your baggage is checked—with a heart full of thankfulness.

When you travel on steamboats, and your baggage is not checked, don't annoy yourself by looking after it. If it is not put ashore at the same place with yourself, you will have an excuse for traveling further to obtain possession of it. In this way you will be enabled to see a portion of the country which you had not contemplated visiting, and as the human mind is fond of novelty, this unexpected extension of your tour must afford you pleasure. By observing these rules, the result of extended observation, the traveler, by the end of the Summer, will find himself ready, as far as physical preparation is concerned, to take the "long journey," which we all expect to travel some time or other.

☞ The London Times has been mulcted in damages for $2,000 for a libel upon one SIRTIZ, an agent of an extensive military tailoring establishment. During the war, this man went to the Crimea to "drum" for the firm, and got into a drunken row. Under the rules of military discipline he was put under arrest, and in the morning was brought up to receive the customary flogging awarded to such delinquents. The Times correspondent told the story, told the name of the firm whom SIRTIZ represented, and although the culprit's name was not mentioned, his identity was so fully established that he had no peace of his life at Balaklava, where the affair happened, nor at Scutari, Constantinople, or at Gibraltar or London, where everybody pointed at him and asked how his flogging agreed with his constitution. To ease his wounded feelings, the Times published a retraction of the correspondent's statement, but the Jury found that this apology was "neither timely nor satisfactory," and gave a verdict for plaintiff for $2,000. It appears from the testimony in the case that the flogging was really not inflicted, but the statement was true. A noticeable point in the evidence in the case is that a witness swore he could not gain access to the office of the Times

Arrival of the Washington.

The United States mail steamship Washington, Capt. Cavarroc, from Southampton on the 16th inst., arrived at this port yesterday morning. The advices by the Washington are to late by three days as those brought by the Arabia, which will be found in another part of this morning's paper.

The Meat Supply.

Our Cattle Market reports yesterday a continued full supply of beef cattle, and a little decline in prices last evening. There appears to be no lack of good cattle at the West, and they are brought here at the present season with a remarkable profit, except by those who purchased largely in the Winter and Spring with the expectation of higher prices than now prevail. Our readers may not be aware of the fact, that fat cattle sold here last week at wholesale for 10 to 12 per cent below the rates prevailing for a long time previous.

Sheep are still abundant, and the large droves here them pretty well up, though they are much lower than during the Winter and Spring.

Judge Kane Among the Know-Nothings.

There was a boat-shooting gathering of Know-Nothings at Fishkill Landing, Tuesday evening last, at which Judge WILLIAM KANE presided, with JOHN F. DE WITT, Esq., Professor CHARLES DAVENT, and others among the Know-Nothings. Speeches were made by E. D. CRAVEN, A. CHANDLER HALL, and Mr. BARNES, of Ohio. Not only was great enthusiasm displayed, but the "Knight commanderies" on Buckwheat and the like were especially strengthening to the weak knee-joints in the neighborhood. Let not the enemies of Republicanism prate of unconstitutional sectionalism when a jurist like Judge KANE lends to Freedom his aid.

☞ JOHN CROWN, one of the great expelled from San Francisco, has pulled up at New-Orleans, and comes out in a newspaper card, to appeal to the sympathies of the public. He says:

"When I left, there is was only necessary for some wretches to point out or 'spot' any man in the city, no matter what might be his calling or his antecedents, and he had to quit the city at the sacrifice of his property and his business, or be the means of shedding the blood of hundreds of innocent men, by inaugurating a conflict between his friends and the civil authorities on the one side, and the forces of the Vigilance Committee on the other. When ordered to leave, I preferred to do so rather than be a party to the latter alternative. I was accused of no crime, by the Vigilance Committee. No member of that body pretended to charge me with the commission of any act unworthy of a good and law-abiding citizen during my residence in California."

NEW-YORK CITY.

About Bonnets, and how Mrs. Timberlimb was "starved" in them.

A New-York lady prides herself on her bonnet. If she be "fashionable" she requires an extensive supply of these top knots of dress. First, she must have her morning hat—a plain affair, neat and tidy—in which she does her early shopping. Later in the day she does her promenade hat—rich and gay with feathers, flowers and ribbons—the bewitching magnet of beaux in which she sails smartly down Broadway, under a tilt hat of a sun-shade, balanced so skillfully as not to conceal one brilliant point in the gay charades.

Then she has her carriage hat, (for my lady has a carriage) which is dashing on the check and classic style, and is a trifle smaller than her other hats, and more delicate in form and trimming. In this she rides out, makes her calls and visits church on Sunday.

Then comes the opera hat—jaunty and dashing—the target of lorgnettes in the parquette, and the envy of dark eyes in the gallery.

But every hat, like every dog, has its day—and so, too, it has its band-box! And as the day passes by, what an accumulation of band-boxes must be in my lady's mansion! More formidable than the accumulation of old boots by a bachelor of five score!

But who makes all the bonnets? Not the fashionable milliner on Broadway, where my lady left her order. And yet one would not think that such a dainty, delicate thing as a lady's hat, is turned off by wholesale in a factory, like pen-jackets and shoe pegs! Down town, in John-street, in Division-street, along the Bowery, there are large bonnet factories, where the Broadway milliner sends my lady's order, and where my lady's hat is manufactured, subject to the finishing touches of her Broadway friend.

At one of these down-town factories, last week, Mrs. Doosenberry, who is familiar with the ways of trade, purchased a "sensation hat," and paid six dollars for it. It was an elegant thing, and caught the eye of Mrs. Timberlimb, living on Fifth-avenue, who determined to have one just like it. She hurries to her Broadway milliner, in pursuit of the "sweet thing." She finds it—the very duplicate of Mrs. D's hat!

"Pray, what is the price?"

"Twenty-five dollars, marm!"

And the hat is forthwith sent up to the Timberlimb's, on Fifth-avenue.

The proud owner of the last hat out immediately takes her carriage and calls on her friend Mrs. Doosenberry, who does not live on Fifth-avenue.

The new hats are the subject of conversation for two hours. Mrs. T. tells all about her hat and her milliner, and Mrs. D. tells all about her hat and her milliner. They institute an investigation, and they find that both hats were made and finished at the same factory, where they were valued at the same price!

Ask Mrs. Timberlimb, now, where she got her last hat, or what she gave for it, and she will tell you that it was sent over as a present from a friend in Paris!

Detailing Policemen out of their Districts.

In the official statements of the number of Policemen in each Ward, there seems to be an equitable distribution of them throughout the City. But the actual number on duty in the up-town Wards shows quite a different result.

At this season of the year it is well known that very many of the residents of the Fifteenth, Eighteenth and Twenty-first Wards are out of the City, and their residences are closed for one or two months, so that they are especially exposed to the unmolested operation of burglars, this being their harvest time. If, therefore, there is any part of the year when these Wards should have a full force on their beats, so that the Policemen can frequently pass over them, and have time to examine each closed dwelling, it is now.

The Twenty-first Ward is entitled to forty-five men besides its officers, and the Ward is large enough to require all this force; of this number, seventeen are regularly detailed out of the district, to serve in other Wards, and in the Courts; add to this those who are sick, suspended, or relieved from patrol duty for special purposes, and the average number of Policemen in actual service from day to day in the Ward, is only twenty-five, and these must be again divided into two squads, so only half can be on duty at one time. Divide this number by the number of blocks in the Ward, and it will be seen that it is utterly impossible for any Policeman to effectually guard the portion assigned him. We know that some beats in this Ward cover from twenty-five to thirty blocks. A burglar has only to watch the Policeman pass any given point, and he is sure of an undisturbed hour or two, to execute his designs on any dwelling.

☞ The attention of the Vestry of Trinity Church is invited to the disgraceful condition of St. John's Burying-ground on Hudson-street. Although interments have nearly ceased in that place, it would be nothing more than a mark of respect to the dead to keep the grounds in repair. We had occasion to wander in the place the other day, and found the grass overgrown with matted masses of thistles and nettles, the iron railing rusty and broken, and many tombstones in the grave, they which was thrown atop long ago. The grass is visible, the eastern part of the grounds is a swampy, nearly impassable, and the air is tainted with the

LONG ISLAND.

Water for Brooklyn.

The Brooklynites are to have water of late. The ceremony of breaking ground preparatory to the job is to take place to-day at 4 P. M. The President of the Nassau Water Company, Mr. JOHN B. [illegible], and directors are expected here from Albany, Troy and Rensselaer. The gun of the element is reserved for the finale of the ceremony. Invitations for invited guests have been issued for 3½ o'clock.

Nobody seems to doubt that this project is feasible enough, and that the work will be completed in two years. All agree that the water we are to have is excellent. The Nassau Water Company is incorporated by the State Legislature with a capital of $1,000,000, with the privilege of increasing it to $5,000,000, the city being authorized to take $1,000,000. This Company have contracted with J. Wright & Co. to supply the city with water, and the latter have contracted with other parties to build engines, lay down 100 miles of pipe through the city, set 500 hydrants, and perform the entire work for $2,000,000. The contract for the delivery of the pipes is to be completed in 18,000,000 gallons of water per day for two years, and 10,000,000 additional one year, and 20,000,000 additional one year, making in all 60,000,000 gallons, with the exception of a reserve power, which is designed for the distribution of water, and which is to be constructed for the Brooklyn Water Company, and is to be completed in twenty months. The plan is to construct works on a scale large enough for the present time, yet capable of enlargement as may demand arise in the future, as the city shall increase. The supply of water for this purpose are said to be abundant. The entire source of supply are located on Long Island, within a distance of ninety miles from the city, and supplied by springs, and capable of being collected artificially. It is only necessary to construct additional reservoirs to increase the supply for the supply of New-York for 100,000 per day. The reservoir on Croton Hill, near Croton Lake, is 1,000 feet long, 500 feet wide, and 30 feet deep, and is capable of holding 50,000,000 gallons of water. The reservoir on Flatbush Hill, 275 feet above the level of the sea, is capable of holding 50,000,000 gallons. The most important feature in the whole scheme is the storage reservoir on Cypress Hills, near the city, from which the supply will be furnished by a large Croton aqueduct, which will be completed in the Spring of 1857. The engine houses will be located directly under the hill.

☞ By the British schooner Rosa, at Baltimore, from the Bahamas, we are in receipt of the Nassau Royal Gazette to the 5th inst. The weather continued good for salt-making, both at Rum Cay and Long Cay. About 80,000 bushels had been gathered, and a general shipment expected in a few days. The present price is 25 cents per bushel.

LONG ISLAND.

Colored Political League.

An enthusiastic, though not very numerous, meeting took place Tuesday evening, at Granada Hall, in Myrtle-avenue, Brooklyn, the object of which was to "organize a Club, and adopt such measures as will be most practicable in the present political campaign."

The Chair was taken by Mr. E. C. HEMMINGTON, Mr. M. J. F. TAYLOR officiating as Secretary.

A Committee being appointed, resolutions were embodied and presented for adoption. The most significant sentences are to the following effect:

Whereas, As oppressed American citizens, we cannot but be aware of the great struggle, going on between Liberty and Despotism. * * * Being thus impressed and implicated,

Resolved, That in this highly exciting scenes that have and are now transpiring in Kansas, are only a vivid illustration of that sentiment as held by us, namely, that Slavery in this country will ultimately change its victims, that ultimatum will know what it is to be under its terrible power.

Another resolution sympathizes with the sufferers in Kansas.

The next recognizes the platform of the Republican Party as "nearest to truth and right, though believing that the very gist of the matter is left untouched, Slavery in the States, the Slave traffic between the States, the stronghold in the District of Columbia. Yet, believing this, so great is their abhorrence of this soul-crushing evil that they can enter with the merest tyro in political ethics to overthrow this evil—they regard in the nomination of Colonel Fremont, the embodiment of Northern sentiment against Southern impudence and oppression—and to him, their hearty good will, pledging him (as we are permitted) to exercise for ourselves the right of American citizens in the use of the ballot-box."

These sentiments were warmly supported by Mr. STEWART and Mr. GLOUCESTER, in brief, effective, humane and talented addresses. Mr. W. C. WINZER said men are visiting only when they begin to feel they are oppressed. It was the want of intelligence in the South that occasioned in some measure for the ignorance and warring contradictions with which Slavery had been regarded there.

Mr. L. S. FRANKLIN said it was almost a matter of regret that the speaking would evidently be all on one side. The people of the Free States had never before found themselves compelled to resist the encroachments of Slavery, and consequently had not been prepared for the struggle. Now, however, they were aroused, and the result would be that Slavery would be driven back, and the Union would be saved. He expressed a desire that there should be some one of representative character and importance coming to the rescue, to assist them in maintaining the Union, and thus in public indignation and wound in the end of the Union. Slavery, he said, was a very little cell in the Union, but it was a very little cell in the Union, and it was a very little cell in the Union, and it was a very little cell in the Union, and
